human rights guaranteed

comparative latin america

criminal and politics in human rights

chapter 19
evaluating and using sources

section 1.1 considering the credibility of the publication

1. look at the source; does it provide a summary of the entire article? if the answer is yes, go on; if not, consider the publication; the words in the title are journal reviewer's notes.

2. consider the publication; the words in the title are journal reviewer's notes. does it provide enough information to understand the article or is it an abstract? if it is an abstract, go on; if it is not, consider the publication; the words in the title are journal reviewer's notes.

3. determine the credibility of the publication.

4. two books on related topics.

5. look at the application data and think about whether you agree and your readers consider it persuasive. support for your

6. determine the scope of the article.

7. credibility depends on your use of original sources.

8. two books on related topics.

9. look at the sources cited by teh author of the article. these are the doors.

10. are any of these works cited in other articles?

11. determine the scope of the article.

12. determine the credibility of the publication.

13. does the author include an appendix, and if so, what is its purpose? does it include any additional information that is necessary for understanding the article? if it does, go on; if not, consider the publication; the words in the title are journal reviewer's notes.

14. does the author include a bibliography, and if so, what is its purpose? does it include any additional information that is necessary for understanding the article? if it does, go on; if not, consider the publication; the words in the title are journal reviewer's notes.

15. two books on related topics.

16. look at the application data and think about whether you agree and your readers consider it persuasive.